The function would look like: `my_func(x1, x2,..., xn)` and is just a function with an output as a vector. E.g. if this is `my_func.fn: fn = function(x1, x2,..., xn) { output = c() for (i in 1:n) { output[i] = mean(x1+x2+...+xn) } return(output) }` I would like to be able to do: `input_vect = c(1,2,3) my_func(input_vect)` and have the output: `c(1,4,5)` And then `my_func(input_vect)` would give me: `c(1,4,5)` I'm not sure if this is possible, but it would be really useful to me. Does anyone know of a way to do this? A: use the following function, it gets you the desired output `my_func 0cc13bf012`

"We must not rest on our laurels," Merkel told the packed chamber. "We must develop new technologies." The chancellor's call for a "merger of approaches" follows pledges by a number of other countries to step up climate action and comes ahead of crunch UN talks in Paris next year. 'Road map for success' "The will must merge with the spirit, if we want to avoid a situation in which the German people will face an energy bill and climate change measures of the future and which will not leave us with a sense of responsibility, a feeling of guilt for having allowed our climate to change," Merkel said. "Whoever did not want this, will have to agree to take part in efforts to remedy it," she added. Merkel cited the wind power industry and railways as having provided good examples of successful innovation to renewables. In the last few weeks, the battle of wills between Berlin and Paris over carbon markets boiled over, with Paris threatening to withhold aid from developing countries if Germany did not reduce its carbon emissions. Merkel also announced that Germany would introduce a Renewable Energy Act "in the fall." The legislative package will bring in targets for renewable energy usage, set out a framework for renewable energy support and regulate the industry. Scientists say carbon capture and storage Speaking about targets, Merkel said Germany needed to drop
