Q: Can't start TFS 2013 build agent (authentication-fail) on new TFS instance I have recently migrated our TFS 2010 instance to a TFS 2013 instance. Everything went smoothly with the exception of the build agents. When I try to start the build agent I get the following error: From the logs I have looked in I can see a message saying that the authentication failed: This is a new install of TFS, and I've tried to start the agents in both "delegation mode" and "controller-only mode", and both give me the same error. I've also looked in the TFS configurations window and the permissions for Build Authorized Users is set to Read and execute, and the account I use to login to the TFS instance is an Administrator. The TFS account is also mapped to all the users on the domain, so it may be that the accounts are not configured correctly. I have also tried changing the authentication from Windows to LDAP, and that didn't work either. I have been unable to locate any error in the eventlogs to help diagnose the error. Can anyone shed any light on the issue? A: Turns out I had to delete the TFS instance, create a new one and re-import all of the projects. Characterization of the evolution of two-step emission in a dipolar-coupled two-atom system. We present experimental data on the spectroscopy and polarization-resolved dynamics of the two-photon transition from the $X(1)\Sigma(+)$-g state of the molecule $N(2)$ to the $R(1)\Sigma(+)$-g state of $H(2)$ in a supersonic discharge jet. We investigated both the uncoupled and coupled two-photon processes. We observe that the polarization patterns of the signals depend strongly on the dissociation pathways and also depend on the investigated transitions due to the large influence of the molecular potential on the involved transitions. The polarization-resolved two-step dynamics exhibits a good agreement with rate-equation-based calculations. We demonstrate that the observed variations of the observed polarization patterns can be used to distinguish between the uncoupled and coupled two-step processes./* * Copyright (c) 2018 THL A29 Limited, a Tencent company. Catalytic oxidation of ammonia on the surface of a zinc-phosphorus layered double hydroxide. A novel heterogeneous catalytic system composed of a zinc-phosphorus layered double hydroxide (LDH) and activated carbon (AC) was synthesized using a microemulsion method. Characterization of the prepared material by SEM, XRD and XPS showed that the morphology and structure of the material were well controlled and that the zinc and phosphorus elements were doped at the surface of LDH. The catalytic activity of the material toward the catalytic oxidation of ammonia was much higher than that of the corresponding LDH or AC materials.Q: What is the best way to reduce the amount of code in Zend Framework 2? In a lot of ZF2 applications I see large amounts of code like: if(getenv('locale') == 'en_US') $this->translate('foo', $value); else $this->translate('foo', $value); In general, there are two similar pieces of code that probably should be put in a macro. What is the best way to reduce the amount of code in these cases? A: Two ways: Create a helper Create a helper class that you would include using the on-demand loader. You can then reuse the helper in other classes. class HelperFactory { public static function create(array $services = array()) { $factory = new Factory(); $factory->setServiceManager(new ServiceManager()); return $factory->get(array_merge($services, array('translator' => null))); } } class Foo { public static function doFoo() { if(getenv('locale') == 'en_US') { $translator = HelperFactory::create(array('translator' => null)); $translator->translate('foo', 'a string to translate'); } else {
