If you want to start your journey in Photoshop, Photoshop Elements or other graphics editing software, you don't need to be an expert. However, there are some processes which a beginner may need to learn to become an image editor, graphic designer or web designer. In this article, we will show you how you can use Photoshop to create a website mock-up. You can get started with little to no knowledge of graphic design. To begin, you need to open Adobe Photoshop. Make sure that you are using the version for Windows PC. (Mac version is available here.) Once you open the Photoshop software, click the File menu and select New. On the new screen, click "Photoshop" or "Photoshop Elements" and save it as the "Theme 04" Photoshop document or Photoshop document. For the "Photoshop Elements" document type, click "Elements Document" or "Elements" and save it as the "Theme 04" Photoshop document or Photoshop document. Once you click "Save", you will be redirected to the new window. You should see a "Photoshop" or "Photoshop Elements" sub menu as you see in the image below. Type the "Theme 04" Photoshop document name and click OK. Make sure that the Create New Document checkbox is selected. Then click Next. You will be asked to choose a location for the new Photoshop document. Click Next. This is the mockup that will be used to create the website design. Choose the "Atlas Mockup" option and click Create. Then click OK. You will see a new folder on the left of the screen. Open this folder on your computer to see the mockup file. You will see a few files, but only the "Atlas.psd" file will be used for this article. Let's customize the mockup. To customize the mockup, go to the File menu and select Edit. This will open the Photoshop document. Here, you will see a variety of items under the "Layers" palette. Let's get started. Click on the "Background" layer to select it 388ed7b0c7

The head of the New Jersey division of the Consumer Frauds and Protection Agency wants to bar e-cigarette makers from selling to kids as young as 14. Andres Soto made the comments Monday on Fox News. State Sen. Loretta Weinberg introduced legislation to put the new age restriction on these tobacco-free cigarettes on the books. The restriction is meant to curb the number of high schoolers that turn to e-cigarettes. Data shows that half of high school students have tried it. "We have to set the precedent as the government of New Jersey that we are an adult state," Soto said. "We think adults should make the decisions on how they want to regulate themselves in their decisions of what they would like to consume. And we believe vaping is one of those." This legislation is among a handful that proposes stiff penalties for kids who buy e-cigarettes. The legislation notes that the Food and Drug Administration warned that "e-cigarettes may be a significant public health risk to users, including in adolescents and children." Assemblywoman Cleopatra Tucker introduced legislation in July that prohibits anyone younger than 21 from purchasing any electronic nicotine delivery system, or ENDS. It was later amended in late October. The bill would require e-cigarette sellers to post signage in the retailer's store explaining how dangerous ENDS can be. It also prohibits sales of ENDS to teens at large malls and retail store outlets. Adult smokers who buy e-cigarettes online must be at least 18 years old, according to the proposed legislation. Penalties for minors who sell e-cigarettes range from $200 to $1,000 and up to 90 days of community service. The bill would also provide e-cigarette users with state-issued insurance cards, known as a "Storefront license." The card would enable retailers to claim tax breaks on their purchase of e-cigarettes. The full Assembly will take up both bills in two weeks. A spokesman for state Sen. Joseph Vitale said he plans to offer a bill similar to Soto's. Caitlyn Caruso may be reached at ccaruso@njadvancemedia.com. Follow her on Twitter @c_caruso. Find NJ.com on Facebook.
