Gujarat, which had been pummelled by a record 21 and nine-day rain since August 27, had rainfall at its metropolis Ahmedabad of 75.4mm, an excess of around half of what the meteorological department says is the annual average. "The state was affected by the monsoon 2013," said Devidas Godbole, director general, IMD. "The monsoon started right on schedule. It does not matter if this (Gujarat) period was affected or not. It is the cumulative performance of the rainy season that matters." The rain has paused since Friday and is set to pick up from Saturday for a second spell. The Met office has forecast heavy to very heavy rain on Sunday from 10am. "There will be very heavy to very heavy rains in coastal areas of Maharashtra," said a forecaster with the weather office in Pune, 330km from Mumbai. "In north Maharashtra, the rate of rain will reduce in from Monday." The state's financial capital Mumbai, which drew criticism over the rain, was pummelled again this week with rains in the city late on Wednesday. A brief "scare" delay caused by lightning strikes was followed by rainfall reaching 59mm, equivalent to more than half of what it received last year. But it was widely believed that Mumbai received more rain than was officially reported. There was much controversy in the city over the government's continuing failure to provide adequate shelter for the poor. Many did not have roofs, while many others went without drinking water or power for as long as 48 hours. More than 100 died in last year's rain, and 200 are believed to have died in 2004, when Mumbai experienced one of its worst rains.
