Another option is to pay someone to perform the actual deletion. The process will likely involve flagging every individual file. In so doing, you'll lose data that you wish to keep. A: One of the easiest ways to delete a file is with MoveFile (C) and CopyFile (C). You can do something like this

```
BOOL bRet = MoveFile(fileName, @"C:"); if (bRet == FALSE) // file can't be moved BOOL bRet = CopyFile(@"C:\oldpath\file.old", @"C: ewpath\file.new"); if (bRet == FALSE)
// file can't be copied

Q: How to generate route templates in Flask I am trying to create a small dynamic route system in flask. Basically, I want to start with route templates something like this: /register # NOT ACCEPTING USER DATA /username # using username parameter as id of record /username2 # using username as id for record /username3 # using username3 as id for record and so on If I want to use a username argument to get a page based on a model, I could use something like this:

@app.route('/') def index(username):
    return "something" which would be called like this: /someusername

So, the next thing I wanted to try is make a flask.html template that would hold the 'views' for each route template and then import the template from my Flask main file. I have been trying to import all of my route templates in the 'main' function of my application.py file, but I keep getting 'TemplateNotFoundError'. I have also tried placing the templates in a folder and then import the files from my main.py file. But, this didn't work either. I am sure there is a simple solution, but I cannot seem to find one. If anyone could help me out, I would appreciate it. A: What you need is to define the routes in app.py, and call your templates from there. This is how to do it: from flask import Flask, render_template app = Flask(__
