Engelbart in 1962 and was released as AutoCAD 1.0 in 1966. Engelbart said that he began AutoCAD because the existing drafting tools were not integrated and it was difficult to draw parts from other drawings. Version 1.0 of AutoCAD was released in 1966 and introduced a number of innovations, including a spline based user interface that was innovative and ground-breaking at the time. Engelbart added several tools and drawing conventions to AutoCAD, including AutoLISP, user-defined commands, an auto-measuring toolbar, a fill tool, text and object snaps, and page layout. Version 1.2 of AutoCAD introduced tools such as auto-selecting objects when they are created, the ability to draw arcs, and the ability to customize and share drawing templates. Version 2.0 of AutoCAD introduced the architecture for a dynamic user interface, an object library for managing paper space, the ability to export 2D and 3D CAD drawings to DWG, and the ability to have more than one user interact with the same drawing. Version 3.0 of AutoCAD introduced parallel processing and sub-drawing windows, creation and editing of catalogs, the ability to save drawings in DWG, and the ability to have more than one user interact with the same drawing simultaneously. Version 3.5 of AutoCAD introduced the ability to print multiple copies of drawings. Version 4.0 of AutoCAD introduced the ability to save, import, and export files in the native format of the system, along with the ability to perform rotations and scale transformations of drawings. Version 4.5 of AutoCAD introduced support for color in drawings. Version 5.0 of AutoCAD introduced the ability to construct design review information directly from the drawing. Version 6.0 of AutoCAD introduced the ability to add annotations to drawings, and to perform Auto-analyze information from the drawings. Version 6.5 of AutoCAD

To study the effects of different cardiac resuscitation methods on heart function in rats. We divided 80 male SD rats into different groups randomly: in group A (cardiac resuscitation group) the standard resuscitation method was applied; in group B (compression only group) only compression was applied; and in group C (compression and volume resuscitation group) the standard resuscitation method was applied with additional volume infusion. Cardiac output (CO), mean arterial pressure (MAP), intramyocardial pressure (IMP), mechanical ventilation parameters were measured and recorded at the time points of pre-compression, in compression, after compression release and after CPR completion. Group A had the highest MAP, CO, IMP and mechanical ventilation parameters. The arterial blood gas test showed an improved acid-base balance in group A. In group B, MAP, CO, and IMP increased at the time points of pre-compression, in compression, after compression release and after CPR completion. Group B had the highest MAP.
