I've been programming for a long time, and I'm feeling like I'm now starting to lose some of that functional perspective. My question is, how do you recommend I get back on track? Obviously I'm no expert, so I don't really know what questions I should be asking. But I'm curious on what direction to take to kick myself back into programming in the right direction. A: I've always thought that the best way to refresh your view is to get into F#. One of the best ways to get into functional programming is to get started with F#. There are several good ways to learn about this language such as the tutorial on the language website, and the book. And if you do get into F#, you may have a good feeling about your path towards becoming a functional programmer. A: Try a language without OOP, Try Erlang or OCaml Post-stroke rehabilitation outcomes in Nigerian patients. The second way is to get it as free software. Clonal complex type IV Meningococcus C in the United States: a population snapshot and a proposal for national surveillance. Bacterial genotypic characterization facilitates monitoring of the spread of clones. To describe the molecular epidemiology of N meningitidis C, a major cause of bacterial meningitis in the United States. The clonal complex of each meningococcal isolate collected in the United States between January 1999 and June 2000 was determined using traditional typing. We analyzed 1,043 isolates of serogroup C, identified from at least 17 US states. A sample of isolates was studied for heterogeneity of the antigenic profiles with an immunoblot assay. DNA was available from 738 isolates. Clonal complex (CC) analysis showed the presence of two major clusters (SSA/ST-4821 and COL/ST-80) and additional small clusters. The COL/ST-80 cluster was replaced by an ST-1157 subgroup in one California isolate. Differences in isolates from clusters were demonstrated by using genotypic markers as described by Porath et al. We defined a CC as a group of isolates that are identical or nearly identical in cps, cas and menB types, the cps/cas pheV/fH combinations and their associated cas2 alleles, and their cluster type as described by Porath et al. Extensive molecular variation was found in the menC, ctrA, and cmeABC loci of this outbreak strain, indicating the existence of diverse genetic backgrounds. Isolates from the major clusters were highly homogeneous, but there were minor genotypic variations between isolates of the major clusters. The COL/ST-80 subgroup was observed as a single genotype, which was monophyletic and distinct from other isolates. Meningococci of this clonal complex rapidly spread through several states, suggesting a high transmissibility in a population. Our results indicate that national surveillance based on genotypic analysis of the cps locus is feasible. The dominant outbreak clone (COL/ST-80) is more transmissible and has a higher potential for meningococcal disease transmission than the minor clusters that we observed. Administration officials and private-sector economists consulted by The Wall Street Journal estimate the "fiscal cliff" would cost taxpayers between $238 billion and $489 billion — more than half the combined $589 billion stimulus bill
