The Oklahoma measure, which passed with a 59-41 vote, would allow businesses to deny service or use public restrooms, showers or changing facilities based on an individual's gender identity. It also directs the state to regulate the use of public restrooms based on "biological sex." Currently, the state's civil rights law protects against gender identity discrimination, but the new measure prohibits all forms of discrimination, including sexual orientation and gender expression, in public places. The National Conference of State Legislatures reports that at least 40 states have already introduced measures prohibiting discrimination based on gender identity, while 17 have legislation that stops in-state discrimination
