Correlation between the in situ colonic histology and response to treatment in ulcerative colitis. A prospective study has been undertaken in which the activity of ulcerative colitis of varying severity has been assessed clinically and by endoscopic and histological grading. Patients with severe disease have shown poor responses to treatment when assessed by both clinical and histological grading. Those with moderate and mild disease respond equally well to treatment irrespective of the severity of inflammation. The invention relates to servomechanism, i.e. to a mechanism wherein a first moving part is controlled by a second moving part, in which one of the two moving parts is connected to the other by a spring. A servomechanism comprises a moving part connected to a fixed part by a spring, and a control means which controls the moving part in such a manner that the spring compresses or expands until the moving part reaches a predetermined position. Such a mechanism is applied in a control valve, e.g., in a control valve for the flow of a liquid in a pipe. The control means comprises a current source connected to a coil of the spring. To determine whether dihydromyricetin (DHM), a flavonoid, has antiarthritic effects in human collagen-induced arthritis (CIA) in mice and studies its mechanism. DHM was given orally to mice as a single dose for 10 days after immunization with type II collagen (CII). Arthritis was assessed using an arthritis index score. The ability of DHM to downregulate anti-CII monoclonal antibodies and the effect of DHM on proinflammatory cytokines were assessed in vitro in a murine EL4 cell line. The CIA model was effective in developing arthritis. Oral administration of DHM reduced the clinical symptoms of CIA and significantly suppressed the increase in anti-CII antibody production. In vitro, DHM significantly reduced both IL-1beta and IFN-gamma production by EL4 cells stimulated by CII. DHM had antiarthritic effects in CIA mice by suppressing anti-CII antibody production and reducing Th1 cytokine production.

LOS ANGELES -- Los Angeles-based ride-sharing company Uber has just entered the Southern California market. That means you can now hail a car to come to your house, take a ride to wherever you want, and pay with your credit card on your smartphone. CNBC went out to Los Angeles, where Uber drivers were anxious to tell us what they think of this new market for their services. Liz, an Uber driver since November, said she's happy about the opportunity to earn extra income. "I definitely think it's an opportunity. I think that it's very good for the business. It's just a good thing for the economy, in general. Just trying to help out the economy. I think it's the right thing to do and I want to support it," Liz, 26, told NBC News.
