From the results, we can observe that there is a significant improvement in the performance time with pinchzoom with the small file of size 25 MB. This result suggest that users may be easily able to handle the change in the design and design the apps with the touch. From the results, we can observe that there is an improvement in the performance time with Touch across all the applications tested. The results suggest that designing the apps to be workable with the touch would make the apps faster (or vice-versa). For the applications that don't allow touch (Execute, Notepad, Malini Tantra, UTorrent, Of Course, and Virtual Server), we need to find another way to design the apps such that they are still usable with the keyboard. You could ask yourself: \"Why do I have to add some sort of stopwatch?\" Firstly, time spent on having the child to sleep is the normal routine of night-time. Furthermore, you may not feel rested at all even when you go to bed because your schedule is so hectic. As I described before, a simple linear model is a weighted linear combination of all the factors that you want to study. We need to build a linear regression model for each individual. This is always a simple regression model. However, since we need to control for different individuals, we may need to build a separate model for each individual. In other words, since we have n participants, we need n regression models. So, in this example, we will have 10 regression models, each of which is for one of the 10 participants.

function in the random effects model. The only thing we had to specify was the variance-covariance structure. But this is where the similarity ends. In the fixed effects model, the links are all the same. For example, the link for the intercept is 1, the link for the slope is 1, etc. But this is not the case in the random effects model. The links are slightly different for each random effects model.
