The basic structure of a keyboard is not particularly limited and can be a standard keyboard, an ergonomic keyboard, a low-profile keyboard or a handheld keyboard. Since the opening for the first protruding portion and the opening for the second protruding portion are provided within the same frame, the frame can be miniaturized even when providing openings for the second protruding portion. To avoid the key top provided for the first key stroke not having the increased height, a column formed between the switch substrate and the printed circuit board has two positioning projections formed by removing a first portion of the column from one surface of the column and a second portion of the column from another surface of the column, and positioning projections provided at the switch substrate correspond to the positioning projections of the column. When the switch substrate is set on the printed circuit board by placing the positioning projections on the positioning projections, the positioning projections of the switch substrate are aligned with the positioning projections of the printed circuit board, and the switch substrate and the printed circuit board are fitted together. With this structure, the switch substrate can be positioned on the printed circuit board without using projections, and, in addition, the switch substrate and the printed circuit board can be assembled using the positioning projections. In this case, the force required to assemble the switch substrate and the printed circuit board is decreased, and the reduction in the force required to assemble the key top to the frame can be achieved.
