Inside the SRPG Studio there are people who don't know how to play outside of their comfortable environments. However, even with all the comfort of their own homes, why should we not be able to play an SRPG or a similar game outside? Moreover, even if there isn't much difference in the SRPG Studio when it comes to their playing experience, there are still a lot of things that should be compatible with a game being played outside. The SRPG Studio team, tired of constantly having to explain their own games to others, has decided to make some basic stuff that could be made for any SRPG game playable outside. It includes the following: • Formats for portraits, character models, character classes, skills, items, and so on • Formats for character attacks, item tools, and so on • Formats for monsters, monsters' behaviors, battle music, and so on • Formats for sound effects, scenes, and so on • Formats for maps, the menu's battle screen, and so on In addition, with the release of this DLC, two new battlefields will be added. Each battlefield is depicted according to the pose made by the developer, and it is possible to create a battle scene using them. Furthermore, a new option will be added to the battle screen. It will allow you to display the battle maps that have been set for each battlefield. In addition, some new backgrounds will also be added. The following files are included in this DLC. Chapter 1: The Flight If you're still here... ... Howdy, my fellow freelancer. (I've just come to realize that there's some sort of derpy English thing going on which prevents normal people from realizing that of course foreign words mean things. Freelancer life Simulator? BRUVBUB? What is this? World of Warcraft? Oh dear. I'm getting confused. Everyone knows that the English language is utterly derpy.) ... Well, you've been warned, so better get going. ... … … ... Ah, not again! I want to tell my junior there's no food. But I'm drifting off to sleep. … … ... … … And so this is it. The final night of glorious life as a freelancer. Meanwhile, our games writer is probably sniggering at my last attempt at a tittilating warning. … … Hello, world. The massive, tragic tears lie in a pile on the floor. Sweating profusely with hearts in her eyes, Chanma breaks into a run. She runs through the hotel and finally reaches the door at the end. Turning to the side to peer outside, she blinks, disbelieving. The view of the moon-drenched sky as she breaths it in a bit of a daze is just enough to keep her there. But how...? I really must get to sleep! Unconsciously Chanma rolls around gently on the bench to stop the trembling. How am I going to face tomorrow? Is this all my life's work? A freak like me...? 0x0꧀ "Hey, Bae," Chanma apologizes. "This is what we've been playing for. I don't know how you'd feel about this..." Apparently, Bae was taken back by her last "excuse", so he gave her a half-hearted argument. A few reporters from a media company had come to interview freelance hacking developers like me. Chanma was one of them. Heh, so this isn't my job. "If you want to do freelancing, why don't you give it a try? You might
