Imagine a world where a mysterious tower stands in the center of a field. The tower is a traveling artifact that is constructed by an ancient civilization to protect all of mankind, but it's now guarding a forbidden treasure for which nobody has yet received a wish. A new path awaits you now. Who will you be? Author's Notes: This is the first time I've written the story myself. It was quite the learning experience, but I think I managed to pull it off. Also, a lot of the story was inspired by Brave Fencer Musashi. Once again, I thank all my beta readers and everyone who bought my game on iTunes! I'm extremely grateful for your support. If you enjoy this game, please let me know! I love to hear feedback, and would love to continue making games like this! I thought this game was well-done, and it was really fun! Here's what I thought about the game: Story (7/10) While I had been reading the synopsis on the website when I bought the game, I couldn't make out much of the story. But I was able to gather a decent amount of it. As I read the story, some parts sounded as if they were posted as a form of advertising material. The story was fairly straightforward, so I don't really have any complaints regarding it. Controls (8/10) I had no problems with controls, so it's safe to say I'm satisfied with the overall controls. I didn't have any issues with the controls at all, so I give it a perfect score. Game Mechanics (10/10) There weren't any issues with game mechanics either, so I give this game a perfect score. Gameplay was well thought-out, and it was very easy to understand what to do. I strongly recommend this game to anybody that's looking for an action RPG. Sound (7.5/10) This game had some really awesome sound effects in it, which I loved. However, I felt it could have had a better music selection. The sounds were pretty good, though. But the music was not one of my favorites, which was surprising considering it was the default background music. Visuals (9/10) This game was very cute. I'm glad the developer did so well with the graphics. The characters and some of the backgrounds had some

-You'll be at the mercy of power-hungry hunters whose aim is to hunt you down for your body parts. -Hunt massive monsters that eat you and run you down like a dog and take your stuff from you. -Evade monster hunters and hijackers by hiding. -The more monsters you eat, the more powerful you will become. *Rated M for Mature. "Adventure" is not an adequate word to describe this game, of all the co-op, third-person, action-type games that I have played, this is the only one where I would call it that. The reason for this is rather simple: the games all have a story to tell, and a goal to complete, and it is nowhere to be seen in this game. There is no story. There are no goals, or objectives, or even really anything to go through. Its just you, and the monsters. It's a really simple concept, but one that works really well. If there is anything that makes this game special, it is in its gameplay, and overall design. The gameplay is one that can't be described in words. It is just you, and the monster, and what happens between them. It's a game that is meant to be played in real life, as a game that is meant to work in real life, and one that is meant to make you feel something (When I say that it is meant to make you feel something, I mean something very deep), but it is NOT a game that is meant to be completed. There is no goal of any kind in this game, and it is up to you to play it and find out how many your body parts can be. It is simple, and that is what makes it so good. It's like when you are playing a game that tells you "Mission" or "Goal", and you know that you don't want to just finish the game and be done with it. You want to find out what your goals, or what your life is like, and there is nothing to that in this game. There is only you, and the monster, and what happens between them. If there is any game that needs to be played in real life, it is this. The design of this game is actually very good, for an indie title. First of all, the monster design is excellent, there are so many types of monsters that pop up, and all of them look very unique. Also c9d1549cdd

This game is about crafting recipes and effects. How to play?The Crafting of an Effect is simple. Choose a Recipe Type from a list. Next you choose ingredients. Combine these ingredients, using the steps from the Recipes card. Next, you find the random effects and/or recipes that were in that type of recipe. Now it's your job to craft. For example, a Recipe Card might list: 0 out of 20 + 1 Random Effect - for a chance of 1 in 20, you'll get this effect. This effect might be: Fatso - You may only find a random effect of this item in rarer ingredients. If you don't find any, you'll get a random effect of 0. The recipe can be found in the Effects deck.Notes: You can only find one effect per item. Effects are randomly assigned to items.You can only find one recipe per item. Godai Of all the BBGirls I've met, I think Momiji Godai takes a lot of strain off of being a BBGirl. Although she laments her fun and games being restricted to attire, she's mostly been a positive influence in my life and even if I'm not seeing much of her attire these days, I'm sure I can end up with some kind of bonus. Still, Momiji's role as a caring and influencing BBGirl continues to make her a role model for us as I and some others have never really noticed the Gakuzantian characteristics of the BBGirls. When Momiji first showed me her official measurements, I found it interesting that she was roughly the same size as both Jaune and Pyrrha. And now since the standing soldiers are familiar with the Eastern measurement system, they probably know that I'm pretty liberal with comparing them to Western women. However, there is another Japanese measurement I like to use, one based on age. While me and Momiji are of very different ages, the two of us are roughly as old as Chitose and Borscht, especially if you factor in our youthful appearances. Hei! It's been a while since I've posted an entry. In this post, I'll be looking at Momiji Godai's character. We were first introduced to Momiji to us as she showed off her measurements on the Dengeki Bunko page, even though she later got facial recognition results from the database. When Momiji Godai was brought to our attention, it was because of her aesthetic image which, unlike other BBGirls, Momiji herself says she's most uncomfortable about. She wishes that people look at her overall beauty while not remembering about her measurements. Thus, while Momiji poses as a carefree girl, "true" beauty lies in "character".

Characterization: Western lovers of Momiji would go with a different characterization. While the Japanese are often categorized by their styles, I look at Momiji as the culmination of the whole tension. It's from this fracture that she draws her beauty, so to speak. And as Momiji's personality is not necessarily tied up with her measurements, her personality is very different from that of the "Brazilians". While most people group themselves into kinds of categories based on their
