The main differences between 3D and full-3D models are the following: The skeleton structure is the same as that in the 3D model. However, when you use the Add/Create skeleton command, the necessary skeleton structure is generated for the models. The elements that are added for the model in the 3D model can be placed using the Rotate command. However, they cannot be moved using that command. They remain at the same position (location) only when you rotate them using the Rotate command. You can move them using the Move command. The elements in the 3D model can be moved in any direction using the Move command. However, when you use the Rotate command to rotate them, they remain at the same location only. In full-3D models, the elements are not limited to the 3D model. They can be moved in any direction using the Move command. When you move them using that command, they remain at the same location. You can also change their position by using the Rotate command.
