
Dragon Age Origins 1.05 Trainer

While the dog in Origins was a full companion that you could use at any time and in any of the three cities of the main story, the two dogs of Dragon Age 2 were nothing more than mere side quests for the Companions that would always eventually lead to an event. The dog of Second Dragon Age 2 could be found at some point in the right city, and the dog of Origins could be found in Hawke's home. In fact, there are several references in the dialogue of Origins' dog that actually talk about it being Hawke's pet that is always by his side. They are simply common side quests though, and they do not even affect the main story. While the dog can only be seen during the day, it is named after the original mabari companion of Origins, and it has approximately the same stats as the Origins dog. The dog even has different animations when it moves. It also is capable of performing a few special moves like running as fast as Hawke, and it can also defend itself if attacked. It also will attack players that try to separate it from its master, but this leaves Hawke vulnerable. This is a much nicer design than the dog of Dragon Age 2, which was just a common side quest that took you to a city and nothing else. The dog is also more useful than the companion in Dragon Age 2, as the dog can bring pets with it, and it can even create new dog spawns. Both the dog in Origins and the one in Dragon Age 2 spawn new pet spawns, but the one in Origins only takes effect after a certain point in the game, while the other one works at any time. If someone tries to talk to the dog in Origins when it is available, the message of "hey! I have a new mabari here!" will appear on the screen, and the dog in Origins will bring the companion on cooldown. If someone talks to the dog in Dragon Age 2 while it is available, the dog will respond with "I don't know, I found it in the woods. What is it?". If you try to pick up the dog in Origins and the dog does not want to go with you, it will state that it does not have any mabari with it. If you talk to the dog in Dragon Age 2 to see what it wants to do, it will respond with "and go with Mabari Hawke!" When Hawke arrives, the dog will immediately run to their side.
