There is a need to develop a reliable, valid, and cost-effective method of ascertaining the health status of the population in Japan, in contrast to the existing self-rating scales in Japan, which are not reliable, valid or effective. We therefore designed the English-language questionnaires for use by the National Health and Nutrition Survey in Japan. We prepared the English-language questionnaires for the National Health and Nutrition Survey in Japan through cooperation between the National Institute of Population and Social Security Research in Japan and the Institute for Social and Economic Research and Policy Studies in the United States. The draft questionnaire, which consisted of 5 sets of questions and should be filled out on a household basis, was sent to the second panel in the Health, Welfare and Nutrition Study to be checked for understandability and appropriateness. The number of persons who completed and returned the questionnaire was 6,908. Six of the 5 sets of questions were studied thoroughly. We determined that the response rate was 98.8% and the completion rate was 69.6%. For the first set of questions, "Are

Q: How to cleanly split array in action, view and model in Rails 3.1 I want to split an array into a list of images and each of the list elements. I have come up with two solutions, but feel there should be a better way of achieving this. The first way is to use the array_splitter gem which does exactly what it says, but there is a gem dependency. My second way I've come up with involves using a form helper but I think that's overkill. Is there an easier way? controller: def do_something @list = [] @list path) end end view: objects_path do |f| %> versus: controller: def do_something @collection = @collection.where(:path => @path) end view:
