This is quite labor-intensive, particularly in areas where there is limited access (for example, on roofs) or where a long straight section of construction is needed (such as in exterior or interior wall section), where a more rigidly attached load-bearing structure is needed (such as a wall), and/or where the joist or studs with the screw holes cannot be bent or trimmed too freely (for example, on unpainted metal). If an excessive number of screws are needed, there may be insufficient space available or the structural integrity of the construction project might be compromised.[Vibratory characteristics of muscles undergoing neurogenic atrophy]. The properties of rectus femoris (RF) muscles from rats with artificially produced muscle edema due to unspecific denervation of motoneurons were studied during the contractile exercises at frequency of 8, 14 and 20 Hz. The muscles were found to contract slightly stronger than the intact controls at frequency of 20 Hz. However, the muscles became gradually unable to contract with higher intensity. The denervation of motoneurons slowly regressed within 2--3 weeks after the injury.
