Boil over a low heat for about 10 minutes then drain and rinse the coffee beans in a sieve to remove any extra coffee. Heat the oil in a wok or heavy based frying pan over a low heat. Add the pork cracklings and stir-fry for around 5 minutes. Add the drained coffee beans and stir-fry for a further 2 minutes or until the beans are heated through. To serve, divide the mixture evenly between four serving plates. Garnish with the spring onion, chilli and coriander and serve.Pakistani courts tend to see foreign citizens as subject to harsher sentencing than local citizens for drug offenses. A Pakistani court sentenced a Washington D.C. man to life in prison for possessing a small amount of cannabis, the Associated Press reported this month. The court's ruling came after the accused, Ahmad Ali, admitted to police that he was carrying five grams of cannabis — or a little less than one half-ounce — on the streets of Lahore. Ali had been on his way home from a mosque, the AP reported. The U.S. State Department noted on its website that it could not directly comment on the specific case of Ahmad Ali. "We call upon the Pakistani authorities to show maximum respect for the rights of all individuals to due process and the presumption of innocence," a spokesman said. Another D.C. resident, Waleed Ahmed, was convicted in August 2015 of possession of cannabis after he drove a car containing a large quantity of the drug while weaving on a highway, the Associated Press reported. The area of the country where Ahmed was arrested is a popular tourist destination. Ahmed, who was still a student at Georgetown University when he was apprehended, was sentenced to three years in prison by a Pakistani court. "American citizens with ties to Washington are not the only ones who face possible imprisonment, conviction and/or sentence for violations of Pakistani
