An amphioxus style gene is required for the formation of a central organization of the basal body region in the Caenorhabditis elegans egg. Transcriptional activation of lhs-4 in the Caenorhabditis elegans egg is temporally and spatially confined to the region surrounding the centrosomes. While initially concentrated in the distal pole region, lhs-4 transcripts increase in level in the entire egg periphery and are subsequently concentrated in the anterior pole region. We have isolated and characterized the lhs-4 gene and found that it encodes a 780 amino acid protein that displays considerable sequence conservation with the predicted product of the amphioxus amphioxus lherculesgene. The two gene products are homologous throughout the amino terminus, but diverge in the amino-central and carboxy terminal regions. The C. elegans LHS-4 protein contains all of the structural motifs characteristic of high molecular weight coiled-coil proteins, and binds DNA and RNA in vitro in an extensive region of high sequence conservation with the predicted products of the amphioxus amphioxus lhs-4 and lherculesgene. Consistent with the localization of its mRNA, the C. elegans LHS-4 protein is expressed beginning at the 8-cell stage and appears most concentrated on the distal pole region of the egg at the 16
