An artificial body equipped with high strength and low weight is of great importance for investigating the mechanical and biological properties of soft tissues and for developing prosthetic devices. A novel linear polymer/crystal composite is designed and prepared by mixing a liquid polymer and a crystalline material together. The mechanical properties of the composite are investigated by tensile, compression, and flexural tests. The results show that this composite can stand a large compressive deformation load of over 100 MPa. It retains excellent mechanical properties even when it is deformed by a high stress that causes the breakage of most other components. Furthermore, the composite retains its shape unchanged after high-stress compression and retains high strength even when subjected to a large strain. The linear polymer/crystal composite could be used for replacing or repairing soft tissue.Q: Как правильно скачать и
