He wore $350 (and a backside assault pack) that were made for the kind of work he was doing.Q: STM32F4 microcontroller PWM signal input Is there any possibility to have a PWM signal from external source connected to PWM pin on STM32F4 microcontroller? I've found the following components, but can't figure out whether it's what I'm looking for: PCA9776 - DC-DC Converter - STM32F4 DIP 8 pin microcontroller connectors A: Do I correct understand that you want to control an external device with a PWM signal generated in your MCU? If it is the case, first you should decide what you want to control. With a PWM signal you can control for example inductive motor (switching a motor on and off) or an air compressor. In that case you need a PWM signal generator. You should see on the web how to use it with your MCU. There are lot of examples, for example: Influence of different packaging materials on the mass, in vitro release and storage of encapsulated caffeine in time. Encapsulated caffeine was prepared in capsules, pellets and tablets by coacervation and spray-drying methods and tested for mass, in vitro release and storage. The encapsulation efficiencies of caffeine were found to be 86.1, 84.9, and 78.1%, for capsules, pellets and tablets, respectively. The mass loss of encapsulated caffeine due to water uptake was higher in the case of capsules and pellets than tablets. The in vitro release studies showed that the encapsulated
