One person has been killed and over 60 injured after a bomb exploded in a van in the north German city of Dortmund. The explosion went off at around 2pm in the parking lot of the main railway station. According to prosecutors the bomb was a low-explosive device containing nails and metal shrapnel. Two more devices exploded, injuring a passerby, police said. The third device was defused. The victim, a 25-year-old man, was in the nearby station restaurant at the time of the explosion, sources told news agency DPA. “The restaurant is very crowded and a lot of people were in the area,” a witness told the news agency. The suspect is yet to be identified. Police are hunting for a 20-year-old man who they believe is the attacker’s accomplice. An eyewitness said the van used was “very old, around 20 years old” and “looked like an old panel van.” Police have said they are not linking the attack to Islamism. But officials warned of a “heightened situation of risk for the public” and said they had increased security at railway stations and airports. Police have warned of a “heightened situation of risk for the public” following the attack. Photograph: DPA/PA Images As well as the metro station, the town centre has been closed off. “Our thoughts and sympathies lie with the injured. We are doing everything we can to ensure public order is kept,” said Hannes Wöhler, Dortmund’s police chief, after the blast. “
