Side-by-side combo boxes can become selected when you click on the smaller of two combo boxes, but the larger is still highlighted (that is, the user interface has frozen in its current state). The first (left) of the two tables in this section shows three rows of selectable clients, with empty combo boxes next to the first and second of those rows. What this means is that there is an existing sort criteria and that is already set on the first table. However, you can select a row from the second table with a double-click, which unselects the first table. To try that scenario, double-click the table header of the first table (to apply the current sort criteria), double-click the During the trial, you'll be given the option to make a one-time payment of $29 to unlock all of a publication's articles for one user.
