Under the influence of the three wisdoms of the sage, later generations of Chinese philosophers developed a number of seemingly contradictory views regarding the Way. The Confucian worldview recognized the dichotomy that between bad government and good government (, shih) was no longer recognizable in the Middle Kingdom, and ultimately concluded that all government was truly demonic. The Daoist and Buddhist worldview stressed that while fundamental change was indeed possible, it was up to each individual to initiate and maintain the change (, shu, xian) that is inherent to human existence and the universe (, tian). The later philosopher Mozi saw the world as suffering from all sorts of evil and corruption, but maintained that nature (, ting) had its own laws, which the sage could understand and engage in order to affect the world and bring about the good. Four Confucian scholars Lu Ji (子思子), a Confucian scholar who had received the transmission of the Analects, the Book of Odes, and certain other works from Zengzi and Mencius, presented another conception of the Way. He and a group of disciples, calling themselves the "Four Confucian Scholars" (四子), distinguished themselves by reciting and preaching the Analects in the capital, and asking questions about ethics in public places. They were in general critical of the rise of hierarchy, but supported Confucian law. The best examples of their thinking are in the preface to their collected works, titled "

Sexual satisfaction is positively correlated with frequency of sexual encounters (Rosenstein et al., 2000) or "frequency of sex" (Haley & Finegay, 1998). The objective of this study is to determine the associations of frequency of sexual performance and other psychosocial correlates among Turkish immigrant young males in the Baltimore/Washington Metropolitan area. A convenience sample of 303 Turkish males were randomly selected and asked to complete a survey. The results indicated that 15.2% of the men reported having experienced at least one sexual problem in the past six months, and 35.5% reported a history of sexual dysfunction. Three out of four men with a current sexual problem had sought care for their problem. More than half (62.7%) of the men reported having had sex once in the last month. History of sexual dysfunction was negatively associated with experiencing a sexual problem, having a partner, and number of sexual partners in the previous year. Frequency of sexual performance was negatively associated with experiencing a sexual problem, having a partner, number of sexual partners, use of alcohol or cigarettes, and number of years in the United States. The higher the level of negative affect, perceived stress, and lower self-esteem, the less likely men were to have had sex once in the last month. The strongest correlate of frequency of sexual performance was level of negative affect. This indicated that negative affect had a direct effect on the frequency of sexual performance. Further studies should focus on identifying appropriate service delivery models to address gender differences in sexual satisfaction in a culturally sensitive way. The present invention relates to temperature measurement and calibration of thermochromic liquid crystals and particularly a method and apparatus of monitoring ambient conditions in a vehicle and correlating the conditions to the temperature of liquid crystals in the vehicle to automatically and substantially simultaneously change the color of the liquid crystal based on the condition of the vehicle to enable the driver to estimate the driver's condition in a simple and efficient manner.
