I'm using Nokogiri to parse a piece of text and to assign attributes and values to this html. A sample piece of text is: My Site And this works fine. If I change the string in the source to have two dashes in the attributes, however, it gets all messed up. For example, this works fine: My Site But this gets messed up: My-Site The tag is still assigned the correct title, but all the attributes get the - sign in front of them. How do I stop the - from being in front of the text? A: What is the content of your XML if you have spaces in between dashes? You can't have spaces in an attribute name and that's the case in the example you provided. What you can do is
