the activation code is a unique alphanumeric identifier that is included in a file that is installed on the product during the activation process. upon installation, the activation code is stored in the installer directory and is automatically added to the product registry key during activation. if the activation code is entered incorrectly at least 3 times in a row, the license will be cancelled and the product will need to be re-activated. the key will not be renewed and a new activation code will be assigned. activation is an optional process and most products do not allow the activation to be cancelled. the activation code will be sent to the registered email address and a notification of the activation will be displayed on the program's main window. the license will remain active until the product is uninstalled. any actions that are taken before the product is uninstalled will have no effect on the licensing status of the product. you can also activate your kms host by using the microsoft volume licensing toolkit. activate your kms host by calling the microsoft volume licensing activation center. if you are already registered with microsoft, you can use a kms host registration code to activate your kms host. if you are new to microsoft volume licensing, you must register with microsoft to activate your kms host. to get a registration code for your kms host, you must sign up for a microsoft volume licensing activation center. depending on the products you use, activation can be required at the time of purchase or within a specified timeframe of use. for example, a software vendor could require you to activate your software within 30 days of installation. in this example, your activation codes are not valid after 30 days of installation. the 30-day activation period is the time period the vendor has to activate the product, so they can provide support for the product while it is activated. if you have registered for microsoft volume licensing, you can activate your kms host remotely. 5ec8ef588b
