GUILDERLAND — As the city's disabled-access ordinance met the City Council's midnight deadline for passage last Monday, three candidates vying for the 2,400-seat mayor's office were waiting outside the conference room at City Hall for their chance to speak. One of them was Robert K. McCoy III, a candidate who has no obvious disability. The others were Daniel Todd, a candidate for mayor who has a more obvious disability, and Jeff Eustace, a candidate who has a disability of some sort, but whose affliction was not readily apparent by looking at him. He was there, Mr. Eustace said, because he had been invited to speak on behalf of his disabled relatives, whom he described as “people who would be adversely affected” by the ordinance. The ordinance, which would restrict the percentage of handicapped parking spaces in downtown, passed with 8 to 7 votes on Monday afternoon and will now be considered by the state Legislature.

Lumberhill game "Multiplayer co-op game for PC, PS4 and.Q: Rails 3: Accessing a user's articles_count from a user's profile I have a user model with a single boolean attribute "active". If a user is not active, then any articles they've written or commented on will be marked as inactive, and will not show up in the index, show, or similar pages on the site. If a user is active, they will see their articles and comments, and the active:false articles/comments will not be included. I'm trying to create a page that will show the articles and comments of each user, but filtered to only return the active articles/comments. This is what I have so far:

def articles_for_user @user = User.find(params[:id]) @articles = @user.article_ids.where(:active => true)

end

The method seems to work correctly if I am not using it in an index or show action. But it doesn't display the articles or comments when used in the index action. I have tried changing the params[:id] to @user.id, but that doesn't help either. I have an idea that the approach is wrong, or maybe I'm misunderstanding something about the result of find(), but I can't think of a better approach. Any ideas? EDIT: I was playing around with the code, and realized that this works when I run it in the console, but doesn't work when I put it in a view. I'm using Rails 3, so I'm guessing that there is some element of "getting the context" for the method that is changed when I put it in a view? A: If you are passing the id to the method, then the method will find the user with the id you pass to it in params. if you want to use find, then you need to pass the user to the method @user = User.find(params[

Case: A novice Ubuntu newbie here. I want to develop Linux application using Ubuntu Jaunty Jackalope beta (9.04). But I don't know Linux C++ to start. So, I wanted to use my Windows application to test in Ubuntu. I have installed Win XP as virtual machine in VMware to run my windows application. After a bit of research, I found that the easiest way is to transfer the Virtual Machine into VMware image format. In VMware, I right clicked on the desired VM window -> Disk -> New disk image. Then I selected the folder which contains the Win image and the required libraries. After the image is created, it can be given a name and formatted
