Predictors of cardiac recovery following reperfusion therapy for acute myocardial infarction: data from the Quebec City MI Registry. To identify the characteristics of patients who are most likely to benefit from reperfusion therapy in the first hours after the onset of acute myocardial infarction (AMI). A retrospective study using data from the Quebec City MI Registry. Five-hundred and eighty-eight patients who underwent thrombolytic therapy for AMI were evaluated. Three-hundred and eighty-two (64%) presented with anterior AMI and 206 (36%) with inferior AMI. Overall in-hospital and 1-year survival rates were 89 and 74%, respectively. For patients with anterior AMI and early reperfusion, survival at 1 year was 81% in those without left ventricular dysfunction (LVD) at hospital admission and 94% in those with LVD ($p = 0.014$). In patients without LVD at hospital admission, those without left circumflex coronary artery (LCx) occlusion (including left main coronary artery), and those with reperfusion therapy within the first 2 h, survival at 1 year was 85%; the corresponding rate was 77% for patients with LCx occlusion ($p = 0.005$). For patients with inferior AMI, survival at 1 year was 87% in those

Most picture files are so compressed that they don't easily fit into the MB. During its Fox News report, ABC News began providing a good explanation of the Court case Elian Gonzales v. John Ashcroft, from which Gonzales' case originated. In short, all the states could have excluded Gonzales from their borders, but they didn't, which forced the federal government to intervene. Thus, the states had no right to intervene in the case. When the case was first filed, the states could have simply defended their right to keep Gonzales on state soil, but they didn't want to put into their mouths the same thing that they were saying about the federal government—namely that they could leave Gonzales alone. Thus, the states were useless. The case is an example of the states “lying” to the federal government. It is a case of them manipulating the federal government, like the federal government manipulated the South's attempt to keep it from leaving the Union. But what happens when the federal government comes onto an individual's property and takes its property away? Who has the right to defend this action, if the federal government has the right to take property away from its citizens? Such is the question at the heart of the Churchwell v. City of Fort Collins, CO, case now working its way through the federal courts. Last week, the Tenth Circuit Court of Appeals denied the city's motion to dismiss the lawsuit. The case was brought by three individuals who were attempting to get the federal government to return the land owned by the property owners. The land was seized by the federal government after the homeowners had not paid their property taxes for several years, despite the fact that the property was apparently already owned
