Field of the Invention This invention is related to a system for the thermal treatment of oil shale. More specifically, the invention provides a system for the in situ, i.e. without the use of surface mining or stripping, thermal treatment of oil shale to selectively or selectively and simultaneously produce desired thermal and/or chemical products in a safe and efficient manner. 2. Description of Prior Art Oil shale is the most abundant energy reserve in the United States. As compared to conventional oil, oil shale has, in the most mineralized forms, the highest energy content. The principal source of oil shale is the Green River formation in Piceance Creek Valley, a minor fold and thrust belt in southwest Colorado and northeastern Utah with occurrences in adjacent parts of New Mexico and Wyoming. The Green River formation consists primarily of carbonaceous pyrobitumen which, in nature, is the source of shale oil. There is also an abundance of organic carbonaceous material. Prior art processes which may be used to recover the shale oil from a coalbed have been disclosed in several patents. One such process is the method of conventional retorting of oil shale as described in U.S. Pat. No. 3,661,423 (1972). In the retorting of oil shale, heat is applied to a formation containing oil shale to create a retort and then the formed retort is flooded with water to produce liquid and gaseous products. One problem with this process is that the vapor pressure of the gas produced is often sufficiently high that it is difficult to drive off the gas from the oil shale. U.S. Pat. No. 4,067,389 (1978) describes a method of pyrolysis wherein a hydrocarbonaceous pyrolysis feed is heated in the presence of oxygen and an aromatic product of the pyrolysis is collected. U.S. Pat. No. 4,127,180 (1978) and U.S. Pat. No. 4,137,151 (1979) describe a process which uses a fluidized bed of oil shale heated by means
