Isolation and characterisation of tissue kallikreins from the grass snake (Natrix natrix). 1. Tissue kallikreins have been isolated from the grass snake (Natrix natrix) by extraction with 0.1 M alpha-aminocaproic acid and purification on Sephadex G-100. The enzymes obtained have been compared with tissue kallikreins of other reptiles: chicken (Gallus gallus), turkey (Meleagris gallopavo), Aspidura javanensis and Aspidura melanotus. 2. The grass snake tissue kallikreins were purified 3000-fold and obtained in 19-100 micrograms quantities. Enzymes isolated from different tissues had similar specific activities. The typical order of substrate specificity was Arg-X-Val/Ser-X-Lys-Arg for cleavage at basic and alkaline sites and Arg-X-Val/Ser-X-Lys-Arg-Gly-X-Ala or Arg-X-Val/Ser-X-Lys-Arg-Gly-X-Met for hydrolysis at acid and neutral sites. 3. In the spectrofluorometric assays, the substrates for the enzymes were able to distinguish these enzymes from snake kallikrein and novokinin. 4. The grass snake tissue kallikreins showed a high degree of sequence similarity with kallikreins of other reptiles, and in the protein sequence, the first 15 amino acid residues were well conserved in all the enzymes. 5. Tissue kallikreins of Natrix natrix are homologous to those of all other reptiles, but in comparison with snake kallikreins, they are different: firstly, they possess an additional N-terminal sequence (8 amino acid residues) and secondly, they lack the C 3e33713323
