Chapter 4 # Setting Up a Web Page IN THIS CHAPTER Setting up the web page for a Web template Understanding the HTML code Inserting images into the web page Using the HTML shortcut properties Creating link tags in HTML The first important job of your web page, and the one most of the rest of your work deals with, is to create the HTML code necessary to display your web page. As you start creating a web page, you can skip any of the previously covered items to get started as you set up the area that will hold your web content. In this chapter, we introduce you to some key terms that are used on web pages. You also find out how to use HTML tags to create text that appears on the screen of a computer or on a mobile device such as a smartphone or tablet. You find out how to create the different kinds of blocks and tags that can make up your web page. ## Designing a Web Page Many small companies, large companies, and government agencies can create their own website using a web page. Creating a web page consists of a number of steps. First, you have to find the template you want to use and then you have to create the HTML code. That code is loaded into the web page, but you still have to add content to the page. The content can be images that stand for text, or it can be text that stands for images. In the end, the content becomes the web page.

State-of-the-art perfusion CT-based dosimetry in radiotherapy: technical aspects and application in hyperfractionated regimen. This study aims to evaluate the feasibility of using state-of-the-art perfusion CT (pCT) for in vivo dose monitoring and predicting radiation dose to organs at risk (OAR) in the craniospinal axis (CSA) hyperfractionated regimen. Fifteen patients with thoracic or cervical malignancies received the pCT-based CSA hyperfractionated regimen. The planning target volume of the CSA was irradiated with 18 Gy in nine daily fractions. For each fraction, pCT was performed before the treatment. The dosimetric measurement was compared with in vitro dosimetric measurements in cylindrical models for a single fraction. Correlation was evaluated using generalized linear mixed models. Target coverage was achieved in all patients. The normal tissue complication probabilities (NTCP) for the esophagus and brainstem of both the pCT- and in vitro-calculated results were within 2.5 % deviation in all 18 fractions. The NTCP for the spinal cord, which was calculated only in vitro, was within 5.3 % deviation in 10 out of 18 fractions. Considering the spinal cord NTCP of both results, the mean deviation between the pCT-calculated and in vitro-calculated values was 1.1 %. We observed significant correlations between NTCPs and dose-volume histogram parameters. We confirmed the feasibility of pCT as an in vivo dosimetric monitoring tool for the CSA hyperfractionated regimen. We expect pCT to serve as a useful tool to predict the safety and efficacy of the hyperfractionated regimen.

Making light of the long dark days after a tragic mass shooting People light candles Tuesday night in front of the Parkland school. ▲ Following the tragic shooting at Marjory Stoneman Douglas High School on Feb. 14, 2016 in Parkland, Florida, countless memorials have been created to honor the victims in the heartbreaking event. The school opened in 1962 and has an enrollment of 1,300 students. Stoneman Douglas has been one of the most prominent sites in recent tragedy, as the alleged shooter at the school committed suicide as officers closed in on him. But despite the intensity of the tragedy, others found humor in what has been a long, dark winter. Business owners

Is a decrease in lean body mass from major trauma an epiphenomenon in the elderly? A preliminary report. Severe trauma causes multiple system atrophy with a reduced life expectancy. This life-shortening effect has not been adequately investigated in the elderly. We investigated whether falls in trauma patients from major trauma are followed by an accumulation of lean body mass and whether the reduction in lean body mass inversely correlates with the length of stay. The first measurement of body composition (dual-energy X-ray absorptiometry) was performed in all survivors of major trauma. The second measurement was performed at discharge. The patients were admitted to an intensive care unit. Forty-two patients (mean age, 69 +/- 18 years) were included. The main diagnosis was head injury (48%) followed by abdominal injury (32%). Low lean body mass at admission was a predictive factor for death or vegetative state (odds ratio = 0.83; 95% confidence interval, 0.75-0.91) when adjusted for injury severity score (odds ratio = 0.86; 95% confidence interval, 0.75-0.97), Injury Severity Score (odds ratio = 0.87; 95% confidence interval, 0.81-0.94), and shock (odds ratio = 1.21; 95% confidence interval, 1.03-1.43). The mean length of stay was 31 +/- 30 days. A reduction of lean body mass was associated with a longer length of stay (P = 0.028). A fall in lean body mass after major trauma may be a possible explanation for the reduction in life expectancy observed in severe trauma. A prospective study is needed to confirm our preliminary results. Hartley, who is on course to play in this season's series against England, is frustrated the situation isn't resolved sooner with the Super Over a week away on Tuesday. 'We're definitely not caught up with the situation,' he said. 'We have a lot to play for and there have been two games that I'm looking forward to winning but we've fallen short in both times. 'It would be great to play England in the final. I would be lying if I said I'm not looking forward to that, but we need to focus on this now and try to win as many games as we can in the league. 'The county is an interesting
