Elden Ring invites players to a world of fantasismystery. Rise up, tarnished, and be guided by grace to play as either Tarnished, the brave knight of the ring, or LightSpeaker, the champion of heroines.

In the far past, there existed a ring of power that protected the lands and humanity. But when the ring fell into the hands of the demons and Nobodies, it was revealed that all was not what it seemed. Was it the ring's enchantment, or was it not? And was it truly lost?

In the land called the Lands Between, the creation of Tarnished, who desires to be known as "the age of justice," begins. And here it is time to take the place as the new ruler of the Lands Between!

Players fulfill their destinies in a fantasy world set between reality and the alternative world where the East Ocean is located. On their journey to becoming an Elden Lord, players make their way through the Lands Between by combining and equipping a variety of offensive and defensive weapons and magic.

Players can construct a character of their choice and join a party in the party system. The battle and quest system enables an innovative battle system, and the jobs for the in-game guilds are exhilarating. Players can enjoy freedom of character creation based on race, outfit, hairstyle, voice, and so on.

Elden Ring was originally developed by Gonzo.

We encourage players to become entirely lost in the game and to take the trip of a lifetime.

Q: Echo response from buffer using mmap() I'm having a bit of trouble learning about sockets in c. I'm trying to implement a server client using recvfrom/sendto. My problem is trying to redirect the client socket output to a buffer in the server (I'm only able to access that buffer after in accept, and returning a client socket), and then accessing the buffer and passing it to a callback function. I think I'm confused how to properly "receive" or "write" the data from a buffer. How can I do what I'm attempting to? Edit: sockfd is my socket fds = do_accept(sockfd); int size = 511; char data = (char)mmap(0, size, PROT_READ, MAP_SHARED, fds, 0); cliilen = recvfrom(sockfd, data, 512, 0, NULL, NULL); The problem is, the above only returns a character,
