What's new:

 (or the Fatal Attraction Edition) was a live-action drama web series series that ran on Woot.com. Host Patrick Gilmore played Gregory Bellanti, a dangerously charming porn star; whereas interviewee Joel Grey played the real-life Donald Trump. The original series is also available on VHS (Omnibus Entertainment Ltd., 1992), DVD (Pioneer Home Entertainment, 1992, 1995) and some formats of 2-D DVD (Professional Video Company and Genesis Video, 1998). During the DVD release, the first half of the series was "enhanced" with video footage that could only be viewed with the "enhancements" on. After the second half of the series was replaced on the DVD with the video footage from the first half that could be viewed with "enhancements" off, he later disclosed that the video footage was accidentally omitted from the DVD and only the remaining half was running on the DVD at one time. Synopsis The series opens on a plane full of traveling performers visiting Egypt on a commercial flight. They are carrying their contracts and a hefty suitcase which contains a key, money, and a DVD called "The Art of Violence" containing the live-action footage of the movie Night Game using the same title as the series. This footage is intended to demonstrate to the filmmakers that Gregory Bellanti can play multiple roles. The first half of the series is the most colorful part of the series; we see Gregory's day-to-day life, see him with his friends in a nightclub, his house in Las Vegas, his carefree life at the beach and his lavish condo. His transition into the adult world is a slow moving process, and this half is told from his first day of filming as an extra working in a restaurant and up until that fateful day, he is still looking for love and falling in love instead with whatever girl passes by. The second half of the series, however, is far darker than the first half. The women he is with become increasingly more aggressive, until he has a violent reaction and shoots them. Once he realizes what he has done, he is tormented by his conscience as well as by police. The nature of the second half of the series is more serious than the first half. Cast and characters Gregory Bellanti - portrayed by Patrick Gilmore Nina Weinblatt - portrayed by Margery Turner Ben Harrison - portrayed by David Kammerer Ronnie Richey - portrayed

During the Year of Destruction, a powerful mage discovered a new concept of warfare. Refusing to simply lay waste to an enemy's cities with fire and earth, mages used their knowledge to actually shift the very fabric of the world, shattering its cohesion and causing its people to gradually crumble. With no role models left in the world, people began to believe that maybe it was time to move on and find a new one. Mages without names left a trail of destruction that soon became known as the Great Conflagration.

Cities burnt, civilization died, and it was left to those with the will to learn from the mistakes of their predecessors. These nemeses are called Beyonders because they transcend their original bounds, spilling outside to change the world as we know it. The Nameless is an adventure game set in the dawn of a new era, when two opposing forces fight for a world in the balance. One of them has been described as the "dark" one. Which side will you join?
