----- David Zander is a forensic meteorologist and he also believes in UFOs. The problem is, no one else does! David has often been ridiculed for his beliefs and after an incident where he cannot find anyone to help him, the scientist calls in a favour. A “nice” UFO enthusiast from the police department comes in. David believes that if they look hard enough, they may find a UFO stranded in the desert, and that it could help find his missing friends. However, he is not aware that the UFO has sent an EMP weapon into the air, and that we are now stuck in the middle of nowhere. I don't consider myself a fan of PC games, but there's something about these old school games that I find appealing. The story and characters could be kind of corny, the graphics are very limited and the gameplay can be a little repetitive, but for some reason these games hold a very special place in my heart. [sf] [nf] Noise Fortress is a new point and click adventure. Take control of the world's noise pollution agency as you explore the city, investigate noise monsters, find maps and solve puzzles while also fending off the noise monsters. Noise Fortress isn't just a game, it's a movement. Even when not moving, Noise Fortress is stirring up the air and creating sounds all around you. We've managed to make this game happen because we are listening to what our players want. We want everyone to be able to share in the potential of Noise Fortress. About Noise Fortress Noise Fortress is a brand new point and click adventure game that explores the possibilities of sound. We set out to make a game about the city and what sounds are the most important to you. We want you to explore the city and explore what kind of sounds the people need most. So on this day I played the big game of the weekend, and guess what? It was the number 2 game of the weekend! (yes the 3rd game is out already and still it's in the top ten) In this game you play as a "hobbyist" as a way to get out of jail. You are thrown into an RPG world and you had to kill everyone you met. I'm not a fan of murder, but if you play as a hobbyist you don't have to kill everyone. Anyway, I like this one

The autódromo has seen the names of Porsche, Audi, BMW, Lamborghini, Honda, and Toyota all competing in the 24 Hours of the Açores. Crucially, it has also hosted the feisty, but inimitable, karts, much loved by Moccanese. Now, although not as a touring car the autódromo has once again been immortalized for a different feat of raw speed. Russian gasoline. The Touring Car category has been riddled with issues going back to the “Original” category in 1984. The first “competition” season, specifically set up for production cars, ended in carnage. Too many cars built to their full potential and too much power on the highway (with the drivers having a hard time finding safety brakes) meant that the changes had to come early in season 2. The first Touring Car season saw cars start with the 5 speed transmission as well as the rear end ratio which would divide them into roughly three groups: Mega, Mega, and Mega. In 1987 things didn’t change much. The suspension was upgraded from semi-boost to coil springs and shocks, the engine changed to a Mitsubishi with TBE valves, their counter rotating flywheel and a new intake system, and the transmission was upgraded to 6 spd. The first drivers of the new and improved category were legends in the karting, dirt track and rally world. The premiere of the new category took place in 1989. It basically had the same cars as the 1988 version, but the engine had more torque and the car got a more aggressive nose. Unfortunately, many of the cars weren’t built to the same standards this time around so they remained in the “Mega” group. The drivers would also get the matching 996 turbo engine.

Towards the end of the 1990s, at the beginning of the Honda era, a new title for the Honda Civic would be introduced. Suitably named the Honda Super GT Championship the series would last until 2003 when Honda decided to not run any more events. This left the category with no title and multiple new competitors. The new Super Touring category ran in 2003 and 2004 with 3 classes called the 5 door, 6 door and 8-door. Each Class had its own unique challenges, and each class had its own quirks as well. The 5 door class is basically the platform used for the maz
