components such as display panels, display units, and the like, have recently become thinner with the development of high-performance portable information devices. A component used for a display panel includes a display panel of which a substrate containing a pixel portion is fabricated by forming thin film transistors (TFTs) and electrodes at respective pixels with amorphous silicon and laminated with an opposing substrate, and a cover substrate to protect the pixel portion. When the display panel is incorporated into a portable information device, and subjected to an impact (particularly a physical impact), the substrate or the cover substrate is damaged, which has led to a problem that a defective display is displayed. A display panel formed of flexible material has a large warpage and twisting deformability in its outer periphery. In this event, the substrate or the cover substrate is damaged by the external force applied from the outer periphery of the display panel, which has led to a problem of the display defect and impairment of accuracy in positioning the display panel. Under such circumstances, flexible display devices (0cc13bf012
