Patient Education Cushing's Disease and Adrenocortical Carcinoma The adrenal glands are located in the lower part of the abdomen on top of each kidney. These glands secrete hormones that control the body's stress response system. These hormones control the body's response to external stimuli. Cushing's disease occurs when the adrenal gland cannot secrete enough of this hormone. This condition causes the muscles, skin, and other tissues to overproduce cortisol, causing the symptoms of Cushing's syndrome. Cushing's disease can develop at any age, but symptoms may be noticed in early adulthood. People most often are diagnosed with Cushing's disease after they suffer from hypertension, cardiovascular disease, or endocrine problems, or after imaging tests show signs of an overactive or enlarged adrenal gland. The cause of Cushing's disease is often unknown. Most cases of Cushing's disease are treated with surgery. If the condition persists, patients may have to take medications to stop the excess production of cortisol. If you have had Cushing's disease, you may be at higher risk for developing adrenocortical carcinoma. Cushing's syndrome is a known risk factor for adrenocortical carcinoma. Adrenocortical carcinoma is a rare tumor that can develop in the adrenal glands or in one of the small glands that produce hormones. It may occur at any age, but most often occurs in people during the fifth and sixth decades of life.

I am aware that I can use the LLVM CLI tool clang to generate C/C++ code, but since my project involves compiling C++ code into binary format, which of course is done with clang++, the CLI tool doesn't work. From the reading I've done on LLVM and clang, I understand that you first translate your input code to an intermediate representation (IR) using the LLVM optimizer tool llc, after that you'll run the clang module and it will produce a binary as a result. I was wondering if it's possible to do something similar, but generate the IR from some functions defined in a module, so I can manipulate and later on compile it with clang++. A: You are right that your first step will be "translate", so the best choice in your situation will be to use Clang. You can tell it the name of your module, and it will create IR, just like you would do with the clang frontend, pass your code to it and save it into a temporary file. Here is the Clang documentation. And here is more info about LLVM. A: Starting from CLion, there is no need to call clang++ directly. Just call cl
