To understand the molecular mechanisms underlying chronic inflammation, we recently developed a unique model of chronic neuroinflammation in mice. In this model, central nucleus of the amygdala-projecting (CeA-projecting) neurons are rendered distinct from other CeA neurons by selective expression of the VIP peptide, making possible isolation and analysis of CeA-projecting neurons. This system allows testing of the hypothesis that morphological and functional characteristics of CeA-projecting neurons in a normal state and an inflammatory state are different. We propose to use the system to show that 1) morphological changes in these neurons, previously reported, occur, 2) they occur by molecular mechanisms similar to those occurring in non-CeA-projecting neurons, and 3) they are accompanied by changes in biochemical properties characteristic of chronic inflammation. These hypotheses will be tested by a combination of in vivo and in vitro methods. Cell-cell interactions of CeA-projecting neurons, such as their response to glutamate released by
