I've been doing some research and following the advice of various resources, and I think I'm pretty close to having the final solution for a "PhonePather": a little bit of code that marshalls all incoming and outgoing calls to or from the Exchange Server (on top of Windows Mobile). The primary 'problem' is that my final solution is a COM object that uses IApplicationCommunicationEndpointFactory to push the phone dial event to the remote Exchange Server. However, P/Invoke is problematic because the class of IApplicationCommunicationEndpointFactory is CLS-Compliant "CorLib.Connectivity." So far, I've got two main options: A C++/CLI bridge - this means I'll be able to program with C# without having to translate the bridge between Managed and Unmanaged. Using C++/CLI to wrap this COM object. The problem with this approach is I've been looking and I can't see how to specify to the linker that it should replace IApplicationCommunicationEndpointFactory with an empty stub. What are other options? Is there a third option that is not as cumbersome as the two above? A: You can use the regasm tool to register a COM server in an EXE. Here's an article that walks through the process: Note that EXE's aren't the same as "ActiveX Domains"; an EXE is a regular Windows process. If you just want to register a DLL, the tool is a little simpler: 3da54e8ca3
