noir RPG where you wield a sword and a bird, making fantastic, time-traveling, mash-ups. Free to play for the next five weeks! GAMEPLAY: Controls: WASD Action: Mouse Item: M You are the blade and the bird, a warrior who wields swords and wings with which to slice and fly through the worlds of Psaro's Great Library. Colored drips fall from the ceiling of nightmarish obsidian caves, and bat-winged monsters perch on the corner of a crowded workbench. You are not a demon, but you cannot resist their allure. To get out of this underworld, head to the surface and the arm of a high-pitched, bat-winged woman who is helping the stragglers to the surface. The whole world and people have been divided and infected by viruses, the remains of which have become the Zombies. Stop them at all costs. This game requires about 4 hours of gameplay. The story deals with a special package that fell from the sky and a game that puts the player in the shoes of a boy who must survive a zombie apocalypse. Walk through jungles and stalk through swamps in search of the artifacts you need to open a door in this desolate world. Find the key to open it and the next puzzle. YOU ARE THE KEY

What's new in The Research Age:

The Research Age: Sage Advice for Teachers and Researchers in the Global Knowledge Economy By Paula King, Welcome to the Sage Journals for Research in Education Blog. Today we celebrate our third birthday and are celebrating with the Sage Research Engagement Network (SREN). We are pleased to report that the SREN has tripled membership from its first year, bringing a vibrant community of educators and education researchers to the Sage Publications family - and of course to the Sage Journals for Research in Education Blog - to share the latest in research on education. The Sage Journals for Research in Education Blog was created to inspire and interact with researchers and innovative educators worldwide who are committed to innovative research that transforms learning and education. The Sage Journals for Research in Education Blog was created to inspire and interact with researchers and innovative educators worldwide who are committed to innovative research that transforms learning and education. As we reflect on what has been accomplished during the first three years of the SREN, we take this opportunity to recognize the many important contributions that have been made to the discipline of education research and, in particular, to the SREN. As we announced in our first year, SREN is associated with the Sage Journal of Teaching and International Development (SJTID) launched in 2009, the Sage Scholar program of international fellowships, and with the Sage Journal of Education Policy & Research (SJEPR) launched in 2011. 3 years and over 300 articles later, it is certainly amazing that the SREN has been able to engage with and learn from the world of education research. Whilst many educators will know research as theoretical ideas that support great teacher practice, for teachers working in-class, and to some extent for researchers working on their PhDs, the research literature can be a thankless and difficult task. Last month, we commented how prevalent the term 'action-research' is in the research literature in favour of a more descriptive term. We still choose to call our organisation the Sage Research Engagement Network (SREN) as we strongly believe that the research itself is the key to engaging with the world of education and that research activates what is already in place
