We have a supplier of computer books that uses a machine that reads their books for identification purposes. It reads the entire book, not just the pages we want. How can we build a program to allow us to use this machine to scan and identify the book instead of manually entering the ISBN? A: The standard solution to this is to do some research into ISBN numbers and then using the UK ISBN database you can find the identifier for the book you want. For example, if you find the ISBN for a book you want to identify you can then look up the database and find the ISBN you want. The book page will have the ISBN at the bottom of the page. Then, depending on what the machine does, you can just scan the number on the page
