"What is digitalisation?", asked Professor Kieren Hemsworth, Director of the Digital Futures Centre at the University of Sydney. "The short answer is that it is nothing at all, it is just a way of stating the obvious," I replied. "It's time to stop saying that digitalisation is just a technology. It's a fundamental aspect of life. It's become a central pillar of our society," he stated, and he was right. He then used the example of contemporary societies in Japan and Thailand, where a significant amount of the population is not digitally literate. He mentioned that India and China are not far behind them. These countries are very digitally advanced. "The next generation won't accept being left behind and it will affect the rest of the world in a profound way. But we are still debating the economic and social implications of this new form of technology." "What are the next steps?", he asked.

The Windows Live Writer SDK for Windows Phone 7 is a set of controls that let you create your own Windows Phone 7 applications using Windows Live Writer. The SDK includes documentation, samples, and source code, and is written in Visual C#. You can download the SDK from the Windows Phone SDK Tools and Samples site. The Windows Live Writer SDK for Windows Phone 7 provides you with a consistent API for using the Windows Live Writer editor on Windows Phone 7. The SDK exposes the available functions, methods, and properties exposed by the editor, and provides a convenient wrapper to expose these functions and methods to your own application. The basic usage of the SDK is to subclass the Windows Live Writer editor's ContentControl and expose methods and properties in your application's view model. These methods and properties are then exposed to the view as binding to event handler methods. You also use the SDK to override the content control's custom rendering of the fullscreen editor view and to create your own custom view. For detailed descriptions and sample code see the SDK Reference in the Windows Live SDK directory. We hope you find the new SDK useful. Please let us know what you think about it, and send us feedback!
