Gambier is a term used in CPA circles to describe something that is happening that will damage or eventually destroy a firm. One of the most famous Gambiers in the history of accounting was Arthur Andersen. In the late 1980's Arthur Andersen tore itself apart. The accounting firm simply collapsed because it was carrying too much bad debt in its Financials. Guidance measures are a cost of doing business for the SMEs. They are anything from what business processes are run by a firm, the people handling those processes, and the controls in place to make sure those business processes are run correctly. Guidance measures usually fall under two categories. Internal measures like how are the books being run, and External measures like how to prepare and run a 990. These usually include many subtopics. Each of the three deal structures in and of themselves are not bad. The problem lies when a firm takes any of these three deal structures, and uses them to hide the true nature of the business. Any of the three structures could be used to hide the true nature of a company. In our most recent article, we covered the issue of WHEN a company takes a loan for its operations. The first thing that pops into anyone's head when they hear the word "Bankruptcy" is that their bank account has been robbed. In fact, it is much worse than that. Not only does one's bank account suffer if they go bankrupt, but one's business ventures also suffer because, in a bankruptcy, the business assets, including any accounts receivable are sold off. The lack of severe consequences for going bankrupt is actually part of what is keeping many companies from declaring bankruptcy. The IRS (Internal Revenue Service) actually encourages companies to go bankrupt because they say there is not enough money to enforce taxes on the 6d1f23a050
