I am trying to figure out how to install the 2011 version of the Dell xForce Virtual.Q: Is there a way to delay commands after a certain amount of time? So I'm starting a new multiplayer game where I never want my players to join at the same time, so I need a way to make it so each person can join the server at their own convenience. I've already considered options like asynchronous commands like `command.delayed(0.5)` and `command.delay(0.5)`, but I'm not sure which one would be best to use in this situation. Would a `command.delay(0.5)` work for a multiplayer game, or is there a better option? A: Take a look at the time properties, they are exactly what you're looking for. Here's a sample of how to set them: from `datetime import datetime` def `getTime():` return `datetime.now().strftime('%H:%M:%S')` r = `pygame.time.Clock()` r.set_time(`getTime()`) `pygame.time.set_timer(r, 1000)` Note that if you only want to set the time to the current time, you can use: `pygame.time.Clock.set_now()` If you want to reset the time to 0: from `datetime import datetime` r = `pygame.time.Clock()` r.set_time(`datetime.now()`) `pygame.time.set_timer(r, 1000)` r.set_time(`datetime.now()`) # reset If you want to get the time to the moment a certain function is called: def `functionToRun():` return 1 def `getTime():` return `datetime.now()` def `finalFunction():` return 1 r = `pygame.time.Clock()` r.set_time(`getTime()`) `pygame.time.set_timer(r, 1000)` def `04aeff104c`
