Disk-to-Disk recovery is enabled.Q: ConcurrentDaemon thread I use the concurrent.Daemon to create a daemon thread. import concurrent.futures def main(): futures = [futures.Future() for i in range(5)] with concurrent.DaemonContext() as threadpool: futur = concurrent.futures.as_completed(futures, threadpool) for future in futures: future.result() I expected that, the thread is created immediately after main() has been called. However, it seems the thread is not created until the for loop finish. E.g. 2015-09-17 22:20:47.760528929+0800 async_map_callee[1555:187345] *** Terminating app due to uncaught exception 'Cannot access a disposed object. Is it the correct expectation? I have searched from the docs and source code, but cannot find a explanation. A: What you are seeing is the expected behavior. The documentation says this about the daemon thread: Creates a new thread in the daemon pool of the given context. New threads created by this method will inherit the context's daemon status. Therefore, when you create the Future object with async_futures.Future() (which is a call to the type constructor of the Future type), you create a new thread in the thread pool with the same state as the
