For example, in U.S. Pat. No. 5,703,828, the display includes a mirror that provides alternative views of the same picture. The video for the display is also mirrored in the reflection and thus users view the same images as if the images were displayed at a higher resolution. The mirror can also be used to view a computer interface rather than a picture. In US Patent Publication No. 2013/0019955, a head-mounted display was used to provide users with a virtual reality experience. The head-mounted display included a lens in front of the user's eyes to allow the user to view a virtual world. In U.S. Pat. No. 7,943,007, a head-mounted display was used to provide the user with a panoramic display of a virtual scene. The user could view the panoramic scene by viewing a virtual display element at a selected angle relative to the user. The panoramic display was generated using a head-mounted display including a semi-transparent mirror layer located at the exit pupil of the head-mounted display. In U.S. Pat. No. 8,287,557, a head-mounted display system was used to display a first and second image in a stereoscopic display with a single digital display. A digital zoom was used to provide the user with a

A giant wind turbine in New Zealand is being built near a second one being erected in Turkey. The project involves erecting a "wind farm" measuring over 200m high and covering more than 30 square kilometres, according to a report on the matter. The site of the new turbine is located near an existing turbine in New Zealand, called Millbrook III. But the proposed turbine would be the biggest of its kind, and would generate as much energy as a 100 megawatt coal-fired power plant in Australia, according to the article in the Finance and Commerce Post. The giant project is a joint venture between French energy giant EDF and the New Zealand's State-owned power company Energy Storage Systems Limited (ESS). The wind farms would be located near the New Zealand town of Waihi, which has a population of more than 10,000. The article said the wind farm will be capable of supplying up to 100,000 homes with renewable energy. The Turks make wind power cheaper than coal and gas, the article said. First published as Turkeys can compete with Germany, Asia for wind power, 12 July 20121. Field of the Invention This invention relates generally to a method for forming a metal layer on a substrate. More particularly, this invention relates to a method for forming a metal layer of a predetermined thickness on a substrate using a first metal with a thick surface oxide layer. 2. Description of the Related Art The fabrication of integrated circuits typically involves many processing steps. The steps can include growing a number of layers of materials on a semiconductor substrate, patterning these layers by various lithography and etching techniques, doping these materials to create devices, etc. Various materials are often used in the formation of integrated circuit devices. Some materials which are often used in integrated circuit devices include silicon, silicon dioxide, tungsten, aluminum, copper, titanium and various combinations thereof. In some cases, materials having certain properties, such as conductivity or oxide layer thickness, can be an advantage in the formation of various integrated circuit devices. Thus, in some cases it may be desirable to form a metal layer having a first thickness which is an oxide layer on a semiconductor substrate and then form a second metal layer on the oxide layer. The additional metal layer can be used as an etch stop in a subsequent etching step, or as a conductive material in a conductive contact or structure. In addition
