The database is PostgreSQL and I have created a default report that is to be made available to everyone on login. I have also created an export script to be run on request that is supposed to be able to be run multiple times. I am running into a few problems: On the default report the query works well when selecting several rows at the same time. When an export query is run, the report runs and outputs as expected. When running the export query several times, the database will lock up. The PHP within the script throws an error of "could not connect to database postgres". I find this curious since I'm using the same credentials on login that I am using within the script to connect to the database. If I run each query as a separate process on the console, they work fine. I'm assuming that the service isn't able to parallelize the commands. I am able to run multiple queries using the REST API and select more than one row at the same time. This seems to be the method of choice for the export. I have tried to solve this problem but the only thing I have been able to come up with so far is another script that will pull off the report and run the export on it. It is fine if it only runs the export and inserts the results into another table. Is there a better way? A: To solve this problem I added a Table Lock to the database. This made it so that only one query at a time could edit the database. Since the report only select the count of rows rather than update them, it doesn't really have any need to edit the table. The export script uses a different connection which is able to parallelize queries. What's Next? 570a42141b
