"It's the most advanced technology available for the game," said Sam Hirst, head of technology at EA SPORTS. "It delivers outstanding visual fidelity in FIFA." FIFA 21 had a performance mode called "Dynamic Player Swaps" that allowed players to change the appearance of multiple players on the field at once using their real-life characteristics. The next iteration of the feature will offer even more control over player appearances: players can move freely on the field and change their appearance entirely to fit the gameplay needs. FIFA 22 will also offer the first-ever full-fledged performance mode for the FIFA Street series, a staple of the video game since 2001. The game will offer players full control over the movement of the body and head, as well as player collisions, which will be used to generate thousands of on-the-field situations. The full game will be available in October on Xbox One, PlayStation 4, PC, Mac and Wii U. Factors related to quality of life of adults with intellectual disability.
