The Scottish National Party is expected to raise its flag this week at the conclusion of a 12-year event it has spent tens of thousands of pounds to put on. The annual, four-day demonstration is held in Perth, Scotland, during late July and involves hundreds of supporters from the pro-independence left of the party, who travel to their home city from across the UK and overseas. With the No campaign ahead of last year's historic referendum 50-50, a party source said the event was expected to be "another watershed moment". "We will be out in force," the source said. The 2016 edition
