TOPIC: change in calculus Hi, I have been looking at the level of math a student will need to be at and therefore the material they will need to be at in the next year. So we have been working with the CG sample units and the teacher showed us how to find the derivative of a function. The problem is when we are finding the derivative of a function we are finding the derivative of the second part of the function. For example, when you are finding the derivative of $f(x)$, we are finding the derivative of the second part of $f(x)$. This is the part where $f(x+h) - f(x)$ and is this the same as the $f(x+h) - f(x-h)$? There may not be anything wrong with this if we are finding the derivative of a function $g(x)$ is the same as $g(x+h) - g(x-h)$ then I think you are on the right track. For example, when you are finding the derivative of $f(x)$, we are finding the derivative of the second part of $f(x)$. Thank you for the explanation. So if I'm reading this correctly, we are finding the derivative of $f(x)$ by taking the derivative of the second part of $f(x)$ without differentiating the first part, is that right? If I'm reading this correctly, we are finding the derivative of $f(x)$ by taking the derivative of the second part of $f(x)$ without differentiating the first part, is that right? So if I'm reading this correctly, we are finding the derivative of $f(x)$ by taking the derivative of the second part of $f(x)$ without differentiating the first part, is that right? Yes, that's correct. When you're taking the derivative of a function, you're taking the derivative of the second part of the function without differentiating the first part. So $f(x) - f(x-h)$ is the same as $f(x+h)$
