In a previous paper we showed the interactions of antigen and antibody in vascular biology. In the present study we discuss the role of fibrinogen and its derivatives in the antigen-antibody reaction. Fibrinogen and its derivatives are produced by both the parenchymal and vascular cells. The purified fibrinogen derivative fibrinopeptides A and B have potent immunological activity. They exert their effect through the specific binding to Fc receptors on macrophages. The second important function of fibrinogen is its participation in the antigen-antibody reaction. The binding of fibrinogen to circulating antibodies masks their antigenic character and protects invention relates to a method for the decomposition of the nitro group contained in organics. The present invention particularly relates to a method for the conversion of nitro-containing organic compounds, e.g. the nitration of hydrocarbon compounds, or the reduction of nitro compounds, to amine compounds, or the decomposition of nitro compounds to produce hydroxylamines. The production of amine derivatives of nitro-containing organic compounds by oxidation of the nitro group in organic compounds, a so-called nitration reaction, is well known.

Examples of nitration reactions include the nitration of hydrocarbons to form nitrocontaining aliphatic compounds. Exemplary of known hydrocarbon reactions are the reactions of nitric acid with C<sub>2</sub> to C<sub>12</sub> olefins in the presence of a nitrating agent, such as sulfuric acid, to form nitro-containing aliphatic products such as nitro-substituted ethane, propane, isobutane, and their higher homologs. Another example is the nitration of butane to form an equilibrium mixture of 2-nitropropane and 2-nitrobutane. It is also well known that the nitration reaction may be carried out with metal catalysts such as copper, copper alloyed with iron or cobalt, or silver, alone or in combination with oxidizing agents such as nitric acid, or alkaline chlorides in the presence or absence of organic compounds such as mercaptans, alcohols, and ketones. It is also known that the reaction of nitric acid with polyunsaturated hydrocarbons results in the formation of nitrated hydrocarbons. For example, U.S. Pat. No. 3,878,040 discloses the nitration of unsaturated hydrocarbons such as methane and ethane; U.S. Pat. No. 3,659,692 discloses the nitration of butadiene; U.S. Pat. Nos. 3,542,822 and 3,692,
